

19 Red Flags

On my YouTube channel, I often reference the phrase, “She has more red flags than a Chinese communist parade.” In this chapter, I want to dive a little deeper into the riskiest red flags men should be aware of as they navigate life around women.

I’ve made plenty of these mistakes myself and have counseled several hundred men, so this collection of red flags from experiences should not be ignored. While reading this chapter, know that you can choose to pursue a deep relationship with any of the women aforementioned here. In my estimation, the juice isn’t worth the squeeze and the risks far outweigh any reward.

If you are a woman reading this chapter and you identify with a red flag, don’t get upset. Instead, like I preach to men, work on yourself, take ownership, and seek counselling.

As many men have observed, the wrong woman can ruin your life if you let her in it, so easily spotting red flags is a paramount skill for men to master. While this chapter covers the nineteen major ones I’ve identified, plenty of others exist so exercise judgement.

If you choose to involve yourself with any of these types of women, my advice unless otherwise stated, is to limit your interaction to a FWB relationship and keep spinning plates. As soon as one or more of these red flags are identified, limit her to plate status or simply pass on them and make no further emotional investment in her or a relationship.

There are women out there that will add value to your life if you keep the wrong ones out.

I’m also approaching this chapter with the assumption that you are a man of purpose that values his own masculinity, strength, and traditional male competency skills. Beta men will make concessions and accept red flags, while an alpha male of high virtue will chase excellence and purpose and not let problem women interfere with his life’s mission.

Red Flag #1 - Daddy Issues – If she doesn’t have a good relationship with her father or had an acrimonious relationship with him growing up, she likely has some degree of daddy issues, whether her mother pushed him out of her life, he was absent, or he was disinterested in being a dad and acted as a piece of furniture in the house.

Any woman that didn’t have a good relationship with a strong, masculine & virtuous father in her life isn’t going to value a masculine, virtuous, alpha man.

If she didn’t value her father, what makes you think she will value you? I’ve counseled too many men that tried to rescue women with daddy issues. It’s never worth your time.

Another issue with daddy issues is that it often is tied into Borderline Personality Disorder (BPD). Women with BPD frequently originate from fatherless homes, which breeds their fear of abandonment, and strangely as adults they will presume that they will be abandoned, then act out in such a way that will make abandonment certain.

BPD women are so dangerous because they operate in extremes, they can be freaks in the sheets and act like a classy lady on the street. They can go from hot to frigid cold very quickly and many hook a guy by creating the illusion of being caring, loving and nurturing women. They create the false sense of perfection that makes you say, "Wow, a woman who finally loves, respects, and appreciates me!"

Asking the question early on "Tell me about your parents growing up" will help filter out and identify women with daddy issues. Remember, you have two ears, and one mouth, use them in that ratio—ask, then listen. She will tell you her story.

I've had my fair share of experiences with women with daddy issues and they are never worth your time, effort, and resources.

A woman's father is her primary role model growing up and provides the foundation that govern her belief system and the lens in which she views men and women and how they should interact.

The origin of her daddy issues is irrelevant. If she expresses disdain for her father, she will probably not value men in general.

Single mother households, especially feminist ones, are a petri dish for today's women with daddy issues. A feminist-identifying mother will instill toxic values in her daughter. Instead of being valued, you will be deemed as a privileged male and will be resented for your masculinity.

After my divorce, I dated a woman who had 3 older siblings. Her mother was widowed before my ex was born. Instead of being a single mother of 3, she optimized her hypergamy and sought out a beta provider, and eventually had a 4th child (my ex-girlfriend) with her second husband.

My ex's mother died of cancer while my she was in her early 20s. When I asked about her relationship with her father, she claimed unforgivable indiscretions that her father was responsible for. She painted her mother as a feminist saint and her father as an abusive, misogynist cheater and child abuser.

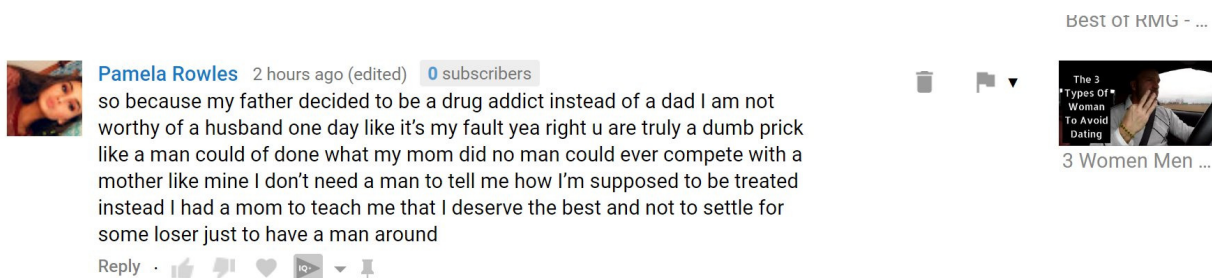

While we were dating, my ex went almost twenty years without contact with her father. She unsurprisingly identified as a feminist, became a single mother of two herself, and subsequently had little regard for men and masculinity unless it served value to her and her children. She dismissed them once she capitalized on their value.

While she constantly battled her internal conflict to seek out a top shelf man, she also resented masculine energy and claimed men didn't subscribe to her solipsistic feminist beliefs.

She ran away from Canada after her mother died to teach English in Asia, partied through her young adult years with many men in Asia, came back at her epiphany phase, and married a beta male that pined for her from university at the age of 28 to fulfill her biological clock, and promptly divorced him at 38 when she deemed he no longer served any purpose to her.

A popular video on my channel called “3 Women Men Should Avoid Dating” was a video based on many women I had dated that had 1.) daddy issues 2.) needed saving 3.) money fights with her child's father.

These types of women will not take ownership for their lives. When I did that video titled “3 Women Men Should Avoid Dating” on my channel, women with daddy issues sputtered their insecurities in the comment section. The example below is a typical response.

Red Flag #2 - Feminists – I briefly touched on this in “daddy issues.” Many western women today either identify as a feminist or have welcomed toxic feminist beliefs in their schools of thought. They’re indoctrinated to believe that men are privileged, hold women back, and succumb them to the patriarchy.

The devout lifetime feminists are usually easy to spot. They avoid traditional feminine cues and opt for shorter, unnaturally dyed hair colours (bright blue, purple, or red), several tattoos, facial piercings, and are overweight rather than keeping themselves fit, well dressed, and groomed to maintain their appeal to men.

Feminism preaches radically leftist political views that fight for unlimited free abortion, elevate single mothers on a pedestal, and claim masculinity is dangerous.

Feminism teaches women to vote for the welfare state, massive government handouts, huge tax rates on high income earners, and social programs that widely benefit the female primary social order.

You will never be appreciated by a feminist, or valued for being a man. Feminism teaches women to be victims, and anyone with a victim mindset can’t find happiness.

Today’s version of feminism is so toxic that it is anti-femininity. It encourages women to hate, yet simultaneous behave like men, and ditch motherhood to prioritize careers.

Feminism doesn't seek to make women better, or more feminine, it actually seeks to make them into terrible versions of men.

Ownership is something women generally struggle with, but feminists are nearly completely unfamiliar with it, and everything will be the fault of the patriarchy.

Avoid any woman that identifies as a feminist at all cost. Since the #MeToo movement, we have seen several great men fall to the false claims of sexual harassment or rape, and the vast majority of these false charges originated from feminist women.

Sadly, even feminine cues are not enough anymore, there are plenty of women out there that identify with feminist values that still remain feminine in appearance and these are the ones you must be most careful with as they are on a transformational path to obesity, collecting cats, and eventually short brightly coloured hair.

If you are getting into a LTR or considering marriage, ensure you give yourself a good two years to watch their behavior and choices in life before you do something silly like marry a woman that appears feminine but internally idealises feminist propaganda.

Red Flag #3 - The Unhappy and Unlucky - Robert Green's tenth law states, "Avoid the unhappy and unlucky." If you haven't read The 48 Laws of Power, do yourself a favour and read it. Always avoid the unhappy and unlucky. This just doesn't go for women, but it should be noted here in this chapter as these types of women are complete waste of your time. Their perpetual unhappiness will rob you of your joy.

They always have some problem going on in their life that attracts the "Captain Save-a-Hoe" type of guys to swoop in and rescue them from their own shitty existence and choices in life.

They often go from man to man draining them of their joy and fortune. They are a magnet for drawing in drama into their life, and ultimately yours. Only associate with the happy and fortunate.

Red Flag #4 - She Competes with You – A woman that constantly tries to compete with you might seem cute at first, but it's a shit test, and an underhanded behavior that ultimately aims to reduce your worth to her. The female primary social order tells women they are better than men, and it's why we see the rise of the "Boss girl" on social media. I've dated a woman that competed with her brother growing up, and the behavior continued into her relationship with me.

It's a red flag because when women compete against you, she thinks she is better than you. A woman that thinks she is better than you won't respect you and will undermine you. For a woman to satisfy her hypergamy, she must feel like she is with a man at least 1-2 points higher than her own sexual market value.

Women don't try to compete with you when she believes your value is greater, but instead will admire you. Remember, women want to be with a giant, she wants to look up to you, hypergamy never seeks its own level, and it can only be satisfied if it does better than itself.

Red Flag #5 - Keeps Men from Her Past Around – Women like to have options. A recent survey showed that almost half of all married women admitted to having a back-up (guy) plan. If you are getting into an LTR and she wants you to abandon your sexual strategy of unlimited access to unlimited women, she needs to burn the ship on the shores of her new life with you and cut ties with other men.

If you are a man chasing excellence in his life, you don't need distractions like your woman seeking attention from others. No good will ever come from her having coffee or lunch with ex boyfriends or other male friends. Men and women don't have much in the way of common interests, aside from men want to have sex with women. There should be no room for male "friends" in her life if you are in an LTR.

Red Flag #6 - Poor with Money – Some of you may know this already from my videos, but I'm well versed on financial services from my past businesses, and when women are bad with money, it's often serious trouble. If she is an adult and doesn't have a pot to piss in or a window to throw it out of, she is not to be considered for an LTR. I've seen too many men trying to play "Captain Save-a-Ho" and bail out women with debt and bad financial habits.

Despite the lie feminism has told women that they earn 75 cents for every dollar a man earns, women have every opportunity to earn a good living today. Yet women still pick careers that pay less than men and overspend themselves into deep debt. If she can't manage her monthly cash flow and has nothing but a pile of handbags and shoe collection to show for her debt, avoid her for anything more than a FWB because she will make her financial problems your problem.

Red Flag #7 – Violent Women – Women that have violent tendencies are a massive red flag. Early signs of violence are as small as a punch, or shove, but I've counseled many men that have dodged sharp knives from their angry women throwing hissy fits.

Men are physically stronger than women, so when there is a domestic violence call into the police, even if you are the innocent party making the call, or defending yourself, it's likely that you will be hauled away in handcuffs rather than her.

In the majority of domestic violence cases, men are presumed guilty and women are protected, even if she was the one initiating the physical abuse. I've seen peaceful men, during a divorce, removed from their own home and children, because a violent woman accused her husband of domestic violence that never happened.

Violence from any women towards you, for any reason, should never be tolerated, and immediate grounds for terminating the relationship. To protect themselves, men must use their cell phone as a shield, and record a video of her erratic behavior as proof for the authorities. Avoid all violent women at all cost! They aren't even worth a FWB arrangement! The juice isn't worth the squeeze.

Red Flag #8 – Extreme Jealousy – Women want a man that other women want to fuck, but they don't generally want their man fucking other women. This dichotomy of female nature is something men will always struggle with. A degree of jealousy, also known as competition anxiety, is a very good thing when it keeps her desire for you strong. But it's undesirable when women that are so insecure in themselves that they will always make her problems your problems, and distract you from your purpose.

They will be like a predator drone always keeping watch on you. She will constantly text, scan through your receipts to see where you've been, what was ordered on the bill, look for hairs that aren't hers, want to look in your phone, creep on women that follow and like your social posts, and count the number of condoms in your nightstand drawer. It's exhausting. Trust me, do not waste your time! She will drain you of your sanity, joy and dignity. Jealous women have work on themselves, and it's not your job to be their therapist.

Red Flag #9 - Party Girls – Most women under the age of 27 are party girls. If you met your girl in a night club, bar, or other social event, and she claims to be relationship material, but still continues to party several nights a week, you have two options—1.) Tell her women with boyfriends don't go out partying and if she continues, you walk away, 2.) Keep her in plate status.

You can't be in an exclusive LTR with a woman if she is going out to nightclubs regularly. The process involves two hours of preparation time so she can market herself to other men. If she is going out selling herself to other men, she is not your woman.

Men have evolved to require fidelity from the woman they have invested in, as a step in ensuring paternity. This is not jealousy. Men instinctively want to know that his woman is sexually exclusive with him. Do not fall for this new age beta male narrative of polyamory. It is a mating strategy for weak beta men that must resign himself to sharing a woman with alpha men.

She is acting available when she goes out to party, and when there is a conflict between what she is saying and doing. Believe the action, never the words. Actions always speak louder than words.

I dated a few party girls, and their phones would always be going off at 2am on weekends from guys looking to hook up. Avoid party girls for LTRs and never limit yourself to one woman if you are dating a party girl. Only spin her as a plate.

Red Flag #10 - Heavily Tattooed and Pierced Women – I realize some men have a preference for women with some ink, and there will be men that will debate me on this, but placement and frequency matters. One tattoo hidden in her bikini line isn't much to worry about, but if she has a tramp stamp or more than one visible tattoo while wearing normal clothing, you might want to ask yourself what she is saying to the world.

Tattoos all over a beautiful woman is like putting bumper stickers all over your Lamborghini. You just don't do it and it shows a lack of taste. I've never met a woman with visible tattoos that didn't bring at least 3 or more red flags mentioned in this chapter.

Heavily pierced women are another red flag. Draw the line at earrings, and if you want to push the limits, a nose ring. But if that piercing is on her septum, nipple, clitoris, and eyebrow or even has multiple ear piercings up one ear, keep in mind that you are dealing with someone that enjoys mutilating their own body, which is a red flag.

Red Flag #11 - Big Notch Counts – Setting aside the higher probability of her having an STD, multiple conducted studies have proven that the younger age a woman has lost her virginity at and higher number of men she's slept with (notch count) decrease her ability to monogamously bond to a man in a healthy way over a long period of time.

A woman that lost her virginity at 14 and slept with 30 men is far less likely to monogamously bond to you over a long term rather than a woman who lost her virginity at 20 and slept with 2 men.

If you want to get into a monogamous LTR or take on the risk of marriage, do it with a woman with a low notch count that lost her virginity later on in life. Research conducted by the Institute for Family Studies revealed that a virgin has a 5% chance of divorce after five years of marriage, whereas a woman with 2 previous partners has a 30% chance of divorce. The data stopped at 10+ partners which indicated a 35% chance of divorce.

Promiscuous women that have had many partners and been sexually active from a young age DO NOT make good long-term partners. It's not to say they can't or won't try to be a girlfriend or wife. But the statistics reveal how undesirable these women are long term and that's why they should be treated as a FWB, and nothing more. Women with a notch counts are more likely to report depression, become single mothers, have personality disorders, and have abortions then women that don't.

Women must preserve their value. Men must create their value. It's why throughout history, women's virginity was so prized, whereas a man's value comes from his ability make something out of himself so he can provide, preside and protect.

It should be noted that woman will never reveal the truth about their notch count to you, so don't bother asking to get an authentic number. Some may volunteer their number, but be wary of random numbers they throw out since women live in fear of being slut shamed. Women only usually factor in relationships as part of their notch count, and they often disregard all the one night stands, threesomes, or FWB relationships they had in the past.

Double whatever number she gives you.

The lifestyle and company a woman keeps reflects her notch count. A woman that you meet at 30 that claims she was in two back to back LTRs from the time she lost her virginity at 20, probably has a low notch count.

But women with an absence of any LTRs in her past that lived on her own, traveled a lot and you met her at 35 could have a notch count approaching triple digits or more. It's not uncommon for women in their party years to rack up a notch count of 50 or more men.

Never forget women become the average of the five people she spends the most time with, if five of her friends are sluts, she will be the sixth.

Red Flag #12 - Single Mothers – Do not be a cuck. Do not raise another man's child.

There is absolutely nothing in it for you as a man. You do not pass on your own DNA, they do not have your last name, and you are shackled with 100% responsibility as a parent, but 0% authority. Some men choose a FWB arrangement because its low hanging fruit, but I've dated single mothers when I was blue pill, and trust me: DO NOT DATE, LIVE WITH, OR MARRY SINGLE MOTHERS. It's not worth it. See my video on "The Truth About Dating Single Mothers" on my YouTube channel.

I've counseled hundreds of men that have made the mistake of living with a single mother in such a way that the state views as a marriage, and they have been on the hook to paid child support for kids that they didn't father. In one case, a man was married for less than two years, he paid off over $100,000 of her debt, and she brought two special needs kids to the table with her, and was taking him to court for child support for life.

Do not be a cuck.

Red Flag #13 – Women Seeking Validation - Social media is a staple in today's world, and almost all women are on it, but women who use public social media to gain attention from men should be avoided. There are no "good girls" on social media, but the better ones will use it from private accounts, meaning only "friends and family" can see their posts and they aren't posting provocative pictures fishing for likes, comments and direct messages from men validating them.

Public accounts using social media to sell a product or service and treating it like a business are okay, but understand she will still have men flirting with her.

The women posting daily provocative pictures of themselves on public accounts with thousands of thirsty beta males following them are selling something too—their sexual agency. Women like this are looking to openly optimize their hypergamy.

If she is with you, but posting pictures for attention, she is asking herself if you are the best she can get.

Most women are drunk on social media attention, so if you decide to consider an LTR with a woman that is constantly seeking attention online, you need to continue to exercise your sexual strategy, and date non-exclusively until such time as she abandons her open hypergamy.

A woman's sexual strategy is open hypergamy, and when she is seeking attention online, she is actively on the ice, trying to score a goal. Your sexual strategy as a man is unlimited access to unlimited women, so do not even consider monogamy until she abandons advertising herself. Do not take these women seriously. They are to be limited to plate or FWB status.

Red Flag #14 - She Was a Sugar Baby – in a book by "B Rob" titled "Salty," he shares his excursion into sugar dating, as a salt daddy, and he figured out how to identify if a woman has ever been looking for money in exchange for dating as a sugar baby.

You will need to search in her email for the term "seeking" and see if there are any emails sent from the site in her past that show up. This is going to require that you look into her private life. But if you are looking for LTR material, you need to take this step to ensure you aren't going to make a whore a housewife. If she was a sugar baby, she is to be limited to plate status only.

Red Flag #15 - Pathological Liars – Many women can't help but to lie. For some, their entire world is a house of cards, and they can't even tell when they are speaking the truth or not. These women are not LTR material, because they aren't trustworthy.

Fortunately these types of women usually out themselves over time, simply because they can't keep up with their own bullshit. My first girlfriend at 19 lied about everything and anything.

I rode sport bikes at the time and she told me early on how she had a sport bike at her mom's house an hour away, but somehow it was never available for her to ride, or it was locked up in storage. There was always a story about how she rode, and enjoyed the experience, but excuses as to where the bike was. I was becoming suspicious of her stories. Knowing it cost me $9 to fill up the tank of my bike at the time, I asked her casually how much it cost to top up her bike tank when she rode. She responded with $25. Right there I knew she was a pathological liar, and many of her other stories collapsed shortly after that.

Pathological liars are dangerous, they will tell you they are on birth control, when they aren't, they will lie about things that will put you at risk. If you are attentive, and poke at her stories, these women are easy to spot.

Red Flag #16 - Baby Rabies - This is an interesting term I came across after I got divorced, and re-entered the dating pool around 39. I had this annoying feeling that most of the childless women in the dating pool were desperate to get married and have children. Some of them were so thirsty to get married and have kids, they would even ask if that's what I wanted before asking anything else about me.

Sometimes it was even in their opening message on a dating application. It felt like they were looking for a dutiful beta with sufficient provisioning ability, and decent genes to settle down with.

Women exhibiting desperation to get married and reproduce are not into you and will not support your mission. They will not complement your life but rather be the focus of your life.

Any women attempting to rush you into having kids and getting married without allowing for a two year vetting period is a big red flag. Asking about long term intent with children, several weeks into dating, about goals, visions, and aspirations in life is normal.

But if you get the feeling that you are just an accessory to fulfilling her biological imperative to reproduce, or that she is counting her eggs every month, as they dry up, she has baby rabies.

Move on and don't let her problems become your problem.

Many of these women put degrees and careers ahead of their prime child-bearing years. As they approach their mid-thirties, they grow desperate. Remember, men can quite capably father healthy children well into their forties, for women their prime child bearing years erode rapidly after the age of 30.

Red Flag #17 - Hissy Fits - Some women don't have the social maturity to process their emotions, so they resort to hissy fits to deal with their differences in a relationship.

When my daughter was 3 years old, if something didn't go her way, she threw herself on the ground, face down, then proceeded to kick and punch with her limbs at the ground while screaming. This is the toddler version, and I thought to myself, "So this is where it begins for girls eh." It's excusable in a child, because they don't know how to process their emotions with maturity when something doesn't work out for them, so they just kick and scream.

In an adult woman, hissy fits are an unacceptable red flag and come in many forms.

I've seen many men fail to spot when she processes conflict poorly. Rather than approaching the issue head on like an adult, she'll passive aggressively go on social media post something provocative and sexy, behave erratically, or make underhanded posts about you.

One says, "Hey fellas, I'm over here, and my man pissed me off, look at me and shower me with validation and attention." The other is a passive aggressive maneuver to shame or ridicule you, usually with some covert statement or meme.

Hissy fits cover a wide range, including but aren't limited to overtly stating, "Just leave my shit on the front porch" to using actions like covertly hiring a male personal trainer you know she was fucking in the past, and posting a picture on social media of themselves together, with some trite caption about how, "This girl is going to get her body back" just to push your buttons.

Hissy fits should be dealt with head on, and treated as unacceptable behavior, otherwise you will constantly be dealing with them in your relationship.

Do not argue with women. They will not let a thing like logic or reason get in the way of their emotional hissy fit. You cut off all contact (called a soft next) with her for about four to five days. Remember, attention is the coin of the realm for women, so when you remove it, they lose their mind and will usually automatically fall back in line. She will either comply or it's good-bye.

Most women, because of their own solipsistic nature, will be unaware of it as a "hissy fit," even if you spell it out for them. So be resolute. You will get out of life what you tolerate. Do not argue with her about her hissy fit.

Men are deductive, rational thinkers, and women aren't. A soft next will allow you to return to the table with a boundary you set, and if she doesn't like it, show her the door.

A woman that has genuine burning desire for you, and is serious about sorting herself out will do the work, a woman that isn't will resist, and make excuses.

Red Flag #18 - Not Being in Control of Birth – In Rollo Tomassi's book, "The Rational Male" he outlines his "Iron Rules," and number five was "always be in control of the birth." As a man today, once your sperm leaves your balls, women make 100% of the decisions.

Knock up the wrong woman, you could be on the hook for around 20 years as her personal ATM. NEVER, EVER trust a woman you are not in a properly vetted LTR with when she says, “It’s okay, just go inside me, I can’t get pregnant.” You must have 100% certainty that there is effective birth control in play, and birth control pills are not sufficient.

Many men have knocked up women who claimed to be on the birth control pill, only to discover she “accidentally” forgot to take them or weren’t even on them. Condoms (you flush afterwards) or an IUD are your most reliable methods of birth control today. Remember, women lie. It’s called birth control for a reason, always be in control of it.

Red Flag #19 - Drama Queens – All, not some, women crave some form of drama periodically, and will actively manufacture indignation periodically in the absence of any issues in your relationship. Drama queens will sort select though random molehills, and turn them into a mountain. This is also another form of a hissy fit.

You will inevitably encounter drama with a woman at some point, but if it appears more than once within the first three months of dating, or a weekly “thing” during your LTR, she is flat out telling you this will be a regular occurrence for life. Buckle up buddy, you’ll be in for a roller coaster ride if you don’t put your foot down and use a “soft next” to maintain boundaries.

Manufactured indignation is really just a shit test, and about testing your frame, as the dominant frame in a relationship. Remember, drama will happen with all women at some point, so decide what you will tolerate. Alpha men with plenty of options will tolerate very little to no drama, lesser men with few options will accept it as it comes.

Conclusion – As stated earlier, you can ignore my warnings about these red flags, and get involved with these women, but at some point, your life will become complicated, and unnecessarily difficult.

As a man, it is incumbent on you to shoulder the burden of performance, and chase excellence. In life, women can become our anchor, or a sail. Look for women that are a complement to your life and fill your sails with wind. Limit your interactions with anchors that hold you back.